Alexander Rybak ran the tailor's workshop in the forced labor camp Boryslaw. In 1947 he testified about Mitas and his wife:

»Mittas was ... chief of the liquidation of the Jews and carried out all the actions in a bloody manner ... In the months of May, June and July 1943 he carried out segregations in the camp and shot the people immediately ... At the end of 1943 I was in Mitas' room and his wife accused me of not having time to sew for her because I only work for the Captain [Wüpper] and on this occasion she [so] expressed herself: My husband has done more for the country than the captain, he carries out all executions, he cleans up all enemies, and the captain does nothing.« (Friedman, page 30)
